Carlos Corces Bustamante, a Spanish wildlife criminal, arrested in Guinea

Summary

18 traffickers and wildlife criminals were arrested in 4 countries.

Carlos Corces Bustamante, a Spanish wildlife criminal, was arrested in Guinea. He had illegally rented a hunting reserve in a remote area, abounding in wildlife, where he had organized hunting expeditions for trophy hunters from all around the world, with no respect to any rules, for years. The hunting reserve was established with complicity and corruption of some officers, well hidden from the spotlight of the higher authorities, who did not even know that it existed. He and his clients were hunting elephants, bongos, hippos, leopards and other fully protected species, sometimes even using cruel methods, like bows and arrows. The operation started by arresting his accomplice with guns and wildlife trophies. Based on this evidence an arrest warrant was issued and Carlos was arrested in his house. The investigation revealed his illegal possession of guns and his involvement in drugs trafficking.

4 traffickers including a corrupt policeman arrested with 270kg of pangolin scales in the capital city of Cameroon. Well organized ring was activating the illegal trade in pangolin scales within a network of lower level traffickers and poachers in the south of the country. They brought the pangolin scales concealed in a car in hidden suitcases, knack sacks and even stuffed in several spaces in the car, including under the carpets. On the way to the capital city, they were exposed by a control post composed of gendarmerie, police and wildlife officials but bribed them with 700 USD to be allowed to continue their journey. The bribing corruption charges were brought against them. The policeman, wearing his uniform at the moment of arrest, tried to use his position to avoid arrest, but he ended behind bars together with the other traffickers.

3 ivory traffickers were arrested with 2 large tusks in Gabon

10 ivory traffickers were arrested in Gabon in 4 operations. 3 ivory traffickers were arrested with 2 large tusks. The first two traffickers were arrested with the ivory in their vehicle at a car park. They quickly denounced a third trafficker, who was swiftly arrested the same day in his village. He is a repeat offender, already arrested and sentenced for 3 months last year for trafficking ivory. 3 ivory traffickers were arrested with two tusks at the South of the country. 2 traffickers were arrested in the South of the country. First trafficker, a Senegalese, was arrested in the act with 6 tusks. He bought the tusks at a coastal town from another trafficker, who was arrested two days later. 2 ivory traffickers, both Senegalese, arrested in North-East of the country with 2 ivory tusks, cut in 4 pieces.

A trafficker was arrested with two large pieces of ivory, in Benin. He denounced two other traffickers. One of them tried to escape the arrest, hiding in a church, but thanks to persistence of the operation team he was arrested four days later in a bar near the Nigerian border.

Carlos Corces Bustamante, a Spanish wildlife criminal, was arrested in Guinea.

He had illegally rented a hunting reserve in a remote area, abounding in wildlife, where he had organized hunting expeditions for trophy hunters from all around the world, with no respect to any rules, for many years.

The operation started by arresting his accomplice Mohamed Camara with guns and wildlife trophies, heads of Bongo, buffalo and other fully protected animals, in Carlos' hunting camp. During interrogation he denounced the activities of his boss. Based on this evidence an arrest warrant was issued and Carlos was arrested in his hotel in Conakry two days later.

The hunting reserve of 25,000 ha in a remote area near the Sierra Leone border was established at least 13 years ago by an Austrian hunter. After the previous holder died, Carlos leased the reserve with complicity and corruption of some officers, well hidden from the spotlight of the higher authorities, who did not even know that it existed. He and his clients were repeatedly hunting elephants, bongos, hippos, leopards and other species, fully protected by Guinean law, sometimes even using cruel methods, like bows and arrows. He was offering hunting safaris on internet in USA as well as in Europe, without obtaining any permit. The trophies were also exported out of the country without proper documents.

The investigation revealed that he possessed guns illegally and he seems to have been involved in drugs trafficking as well.

Togo – EAGLE Togo

- Jean-Claude Vignoli continued his mission in Togo to support the management of the team.
- Rens Ilgen, the coordinator, traveled to Togo and met with the Director of Forestry Resources to discuss the MoU, with OFFAP to discuss collaboration, and with the Chief of Economic and Political Section to discuss the registration of EAGLE Togo.
- The recruitment process continued and one investigator started his test period.

THE EAGLE Network

EAGLE: Eco Activists for Governance and Law Enforcement, is a network of members across Africa, who are replicating effectively a program and operational model to undertake wildlife law enforcement, which is based on the LAGA-Cameroon model, trailed, practiced and tested since 2003. The EAGLE Network currently operates in nine African countries and keeps expanding.

The over-arching objective of the EAGLE Network is: Developing civic activism and collaborating with governments and civil society to improve the application of national and international environmental legislation, through a program of activities: investigations, arrests, prosecutions and publicity. Through this, EAGLE aims to generate a strong deterrent against the illegal trade in wildlife, timber and related criminal activities, including corruption.
